The New, Flexible Math Meets Parental Rebellion

By ANEMONA HARTOCOLLIS

Three years ago, one of New York City's most adventurous school districts set out to tackle a nagging problem: the math phobia that afflicts many students, and the disparity between the test scores of white middle-class students and their poorer black and Hispanic counterparts.

The district, which stretches from the Upper East Side to Chinatown, embraced a new "constructivist" curriculum without textbooke. This approach preach.
